

This is a representation of a unipolar neuron or simple nerve cell. It is similar to rods and cones of the eye. Most neurons in the brain are more complicated but have the same parts. To the left are the dendrites. There can be over a thousand dendrites per neuron. These receive chemical (neurotransmitter response) stimulation from another neuron and either produce an inhibitory or excitatory electrical response which goes the